A Report on the State of World Languages Implementation in New Jersey

Introduction

The following report is based on information compiled in the first data collection of K-12 world languages programs conducted by the New Jersey Department of Education (NJDOE) and sent to all chief school administrators in spring 2004. The electronic data collection was undertaken in response to requests from the State Board of Education, education and business organizations, the media, parents and the public-at-large. It addresses the extent to which New Jersey students are receiving world languages education that meets the state's standards and complies with administrative code. The purpose of this report is twofold: to provide the public and policymakers information about the status of world languages program implementation and to utilize quantitative data on program implementation to assist districts with the establishment and maintenance of high-quality programs leading to student demonstration of language proficiency. It will also establish a baseline to track improvements in the quality of programs offered.

The data consists of enrollment figures and program information for the 2003-04 school year reported by each school in all New Jersey school districts on key world languages opportunity-to-learn indicators such as staffing, instructional hours, curricular offerings and program models.

The results of the world languages data collection support the need for similar surveys in all core curriculum content standards areas currently not included in the statewide assessment program. The department intends to create a data collection system to identify areas of strength and areas in need of improvement in the implementation of the state standards.

Background

Since 1996, New Jersey public schools have been required to provide all students with instruction in world languages at the elementary and secondary school level. The New Jersey Core Curriculum Content Standards for World Languages and the World Languages Curriculum Framework provide local school districts with guidelines for the development of quality instructional programs and extended sequences of world languages instruction. Implementation of the standards has been accompanied by a strong professional development program for teachers and administrators offered by the department in collaboration with other organizations such as the Foreign Language Educators of New Jersey, New Jersey Principals and Supervisors Association, New Jersey colleges and universities and the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages. The department has placed particular emphasis on early language learning and the development of well-articulated K-8 world languages programs and underscores this commitment with a minimal five-credit high school graduation requirement that for some students may be their culminating, or tenth year, of language study. New regulations also allow students to fulfill the high school requirement by earning credits through a traditional seat time program or by passing a proficiency-based exit test by the end of eighth grade.

The New Jersey Core Curriculum Content Standards for World Languages

The New Jersey standards reflect the philosophy and goals found in the national standards, Standards for Foreign Language Learning in the 21st Century (ACTFL, 1999), and student performance expectations at the Novice, Intermediate and Pre-Advanced levels as outlined in the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages Performance Guidelines for K-12 Learners (1998). The standards reflect the latest research on second language acquisition and best practice for instructional methodologies and assessment. They are generic in nature, are designed for a core subject, and are meant to be inclusive for all languages taught in New Jersey's schools (New Jersey Department of Education, 2004).

The vision of the standards is to prepare New Jersey students for the demands of an interdependent world by:

- Teaching world languages for communication;
- Heightening students' linguistic and cultural awareness of their local, state, and world community;
- Encouraging interdisciplinary and workplace readiness connections that may involve business and community members as mentors and models; and
- Preparing students for using a world language(s) in whatever career choices they make.

A Standards-Based Curriculum: What Does It Provide?

For Students—it gives a real world purpose for learning a language.

For the classroom teacher—it guides lesson planning, focusing on broad goals while providing indicators and topics that assist in charting student progress as language learners. Indicators are not lists of vocabulary or grammar, but functional communication and culture goals that are both within reach and motivating for students.

For the teacher of the next level—it outlines real evidence of student achievement.

For administrators—it provides a focus for classroom observations.

For the community—it provides a basis for accountability.

(Adapted from Planning Curriculum for World Languages, 2002)

The Components of a Quality K-12 World Languages Program

1. Implementation of the New Jersey Core Curriculum Content Standards—This is reflected in district curriculum and assessments.
2. Adequate Time Allocations—Time is needed to develop language competence. International research shows that there are no shortcuts to attaining even “functional” language competence.
3. A Focus on Content—The second language itself is not the primary focus of study; it becomes a means through which areas of student interest are explored through the language. The focal point is meaningful communication through tasks that emerge from academic content in other curricular areas and non-academic areas of interest and importance as well. Content in the grade-level curriculum is learned, reinforced, or enhanced while second-language skills are acquired and developed.
4. Ongoing Assessment—World languages assessments allow students to demonstrate what they can do with language, showing the evolution of their growing language proficiency through multiple sources of evidence, using real-world tasks rather than relying solely on pencil-and-paper tests. Assessments are connected to a wide range of content and variety of instructional strategies practiced in K-12 classrooms and, most importantly, have the primary goal of emphasizing language learners’ achievements.
5. Use of Standards-Based Instructional Methodologies—Students come to world languages classrooms with different interests and varying intelligences and learning styles. Instructional activities and assessments should reflect these needs. Teaching and learning strategies used in the world languages classroom are multi-faceted and based on students becoming actively involved with their own learning. There is more student activity than teacher activity in most lessons. This includes student-to-student interactions as well as teacher-to-student interactions.
6. Professional Development for Teachers—Professional development is ongoing and directly focused on student achievement and learning needs since the benefits gained from one-day, how-to workshops are very limited. Some examples of site-based, job-embedded approaches include peer coaching, teacher study groups, mentoring, professional development portfolios, and action research. Teachers may participate in school or district networks that strengthen content knowledge and pedagogy using a variety of approaches.

PART I: K-12 World Languages Offerings

Table 1: K through 12 World Languages Offerings (2003-2004)

*Other languages include Greek, Portuguese, and Arabic.

Over 90 percent of New Jersey schools, 97 percent at the high school level, offer students the opportunity to study Spanish. Most high schools offer students the opportunity to study other languages: 80 percent offer French, 40 percent offer Latin and between 35-40 percent, Italian and German. Among the less commonly taught languages, less than five percent of high schools offer Russian, Japanese and Chinese. At the K-8 level, Spanish is the most common language offered followed by French, Italian and German. However, the number of elementary schools offering languages other than Spanish at the K-5 level is less than 10 percent. At the middle school level, approximately 37 percent of schools offer French and less than five percent offer Italian, German or Latin.

With the exception of Spanish, it is noteworthy that the languages most commonly offered in schools are not the most commonly spoken world languages (e.g., Chinese, Hindi). This trend is seen on the national level. According to a 2002 survey by the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages (ACTFL), there were almost seven million students in American public schools enrolled in world languages classes in grades 7-12 with 92 percent of the students studying Spanish, French and German. Only 8 percent were studying other world languages, as reflected in the chart below.

Table 2: Languages Studied by Public School Students in the U.S

PART II: K-12 Staffing

Table 3: Percent of New Jersey World Languages Classes
Taught by Highly Qualified* Teachers by School Organization
(2003-2004)

School Organizations	Percent of W L Classes Taught by Highly Qualified Teachers	Percent of Classes in all Content Areas Taught by Highly Qualified Teachers
Elementary Schools (self-contained)	88.3%	96.1%
Middle/Junior High Schools (departmentalized)	90.5%	91.6%
Secondary Schools (departmentalized)	94.6%	94.5%
All Schools	91.6%	94.3%

In New Jersey, highly qualified teachers deliver world languages instruction at most grade levels. At the K-5 level, several factors contribute to the fact that only 88.3 percent of teachers are highly qualified. The first is the use of classroom teachers and media or computer technology as the instructional model in some schools. Another factor is that some teachers at the K-5 level hold conditional certificates. A conditional certificate allows teachers five years to complete certification requirements. This means that most of these teachers are in the process of completing the necessary requirements to obtain a New Jersey certificate and highly qualified status. Due to provisions in the No Child Left Behind Act, the department is no longer able to issue conditional certificates. Subsequently, this will not be a contributing factor in future data reporting.

PART III: Elementary World Languages Programs

New Jersey's Core Beliefs for Elementary World Languages Education

All elementary school students should have access to high quality, ongoing and systematic world languages instruction. This belief is based on current research that indicates:

- Young children are at an optimal time to learn other languages;
- Children in early second language programs where curriculum is aligned with other core areas show gains in standardized tests of basic skills and derive additional cognitive and affective benefits;
- Early language learning results in improved literacy skills. Reading and writing processes are similar for first and second languages. Skills and strategies are transferable from first to second language and vice versa. A well-constructed elementary world languages curriculum positively influences literacy skills in both first and second language learning; and
- Improved second language capability for New Jersey students can be realized through uninterrupted, well-sequenced, long-term language instruction beginning in the early grades. It cannot be achieved through a two-year instructional model as evidenced by the experience of many adults.

K-8 Staffing Models

With growing enrollments in elementary world languages programs since 1996, the demand for world languages teachers has increased. To address this need, the department first created a conditional certificate to attract professionals that are native speakers of a language other than English and have earned a college degree. This certificate proved to be very useful in recruiting substantial numbers of desirable candidates. However, since the implementation of the No Child Left Behind Act, the conditional certificate was eliminated. The department also entered into an agreement with an international teacher placement agency that provides highly qualified teachers from other countries. Several years ago, New Jersey had 140 international teachers serving districts throughout the state through the Visiting International Faculty Program. Since that time, the number of international teachers requested by districts has declined primarily because most districts wish to hire teachers that will remain in the district beyond a three-year period. Since these international teachers possess a J-1 visa, the visa requirements do not permit them to stay in the country beyond the three-year limit. In addition, the department has sponsored annual world languages teacher recruitment days which tap into the pool of available teacher candidates in the tri-state area. Currently, New Jersey teacher preparation programs are reporting an increase in the number of world languages students in their pre-service education programs. The Alternate Route Program also continues to augment the supply of world languages teachers.

Table 4: Relative Use of Staffing Models by K-8 Grade Band

The graph above illustrates that certified teachers deliver instruction most frequently at all grade levels. The “Other Teacher” group represents certified K-8 teachers and teachers holding conditional certificates that are in the process of obtaining a standard certificate. Since the adoption of the standards, K-8 teachers have been permitted to teach world languages on a half-time basis. Teachers with K-8 endorsements wishing to teach full-time must fulfill the new requirements adopted in 2004 that include attaining a passing score on a test of oral proficiency and completing an approved world languages methodology course. Additionally, all new applicants wishing to teach world languages part-time or full time must fulfill the new requirements.

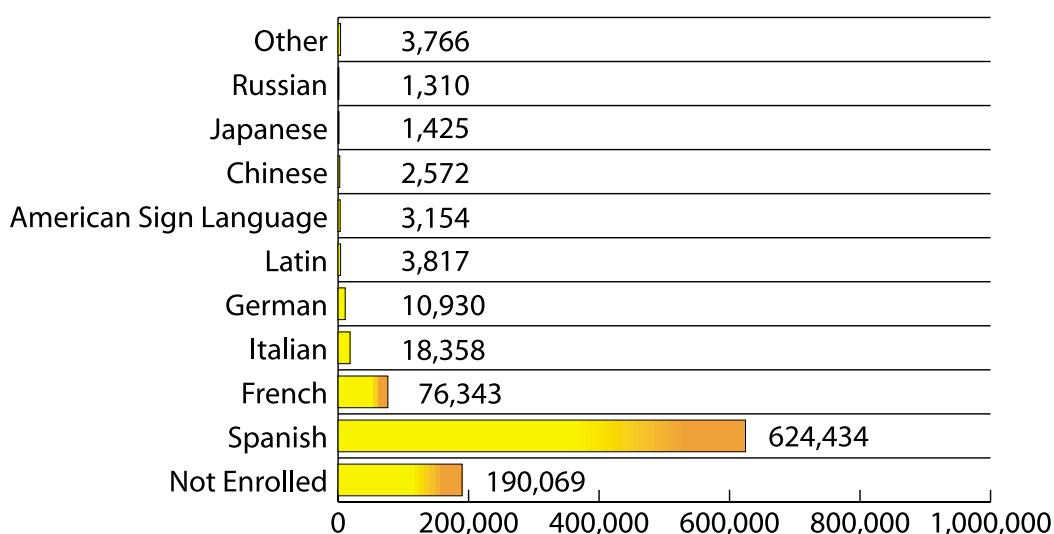

The use of media (e.g., videos) or computer technology is more prevalent in the lower elementary grades and sometimes serves as the sole vehicle of instruction. Media programs can supplement, but cannot replace, meaningful interactions that take place between the teacher and students. Studies on the effectiveness of video programs as an instructional model reveal that the success of this approach is dependent on the quality and intensity of follow-up by a world languages specialist.

The “Other” group includes paraprofessionals or classroom assistants that are instructing with a certified teacher in the classroom (e.g., high school students, pre-service teachers, parents, or other interested adults from the community). This option may not be suitable over a long period of time because it demands an extended commitment from the world languages instructor and a high degree of reliability to deliver the program with consistency. It also demands careful oversight of the instructional process and goals of the program by a world languages supervisor to ensure students are meeting the required standards and indicators.

K-8 World Languages Offerings and Enrollment

Table 5: K through 8 World Languages Enrollment (2003-2004)
(n=904,637)

*Other languages include Greek, Portuguese, and Arabic.

Student enrollment data for grades K-8 indicates that Spanish dominates as the language of choice. Most elementary programs only offer students the opportunity to study Spanish. French is available as a student option in less than 10 percent of K-5 schools followed by Italian. At the middle school level, there is more choice of languages offered to students. In addition to Spanish, French predominates at 37 percent followed by Italian, German and Latin in less than 5 percent of schools. There has been a growing interest in American Sign Language since the adoption of the standards. The less commonly taught languages are rarely offered as a choice of language in grades K-8 as reflected in enrollment data. It is important to note that the New Jersey World Languages Curriculum Framework recommends that the choice of languages should be made based on the following criteria:

Community interest: This includes parental input and the cultural heritage of the community, as well as the changing demographics of the community. As communities vary, so will their world languages program offerings. The creation of dual-language/dual immersion programs is an excellent way of capitalizing on the languages spoken in the community and of coalescing previously disconnected groups of children in a school. It is also a means of taking advantage of available resources such as staffing, materials, and existing programs within a district.

Potential for articulation: It is important that districts decide which languages will be offered at the elementary and middle school levels in order to provide continuous language instruction through high school. Long range planning and ongoing evaluation of program articulation are necessary to ensure an effective articulation process. A K-8 program implemented in only one language will most likely have an adverse effect on enrollments in other languages at the high school level.

Availability of qualified teachers and instructional materials: This includes existing district world languages staff, classroom teachers who have high levels of proficiency in a world language(s) and cross district collaboration as well as language specific materials to support a quality program.

Languages most frequently spoken in the world community: This serves a larger need to prepare students who have proficiency in critical need languages and cultures that are currently playing dominant roles in global affairs. Because of their level of difficulty, many of the most commonly spoken languages in the world today require much longer contact time to achieve usable proficiency. However, these languages reflect the needs of the 21st century and are in demand in many of the diverse communities that exist throughout the country, by business, government and the private sector. Attaining high levels of proficiency in globally dominant languages affords students an added advantage in seeking future employment opportunities.

These data also show that approximately 200,000 students at different grade levels at the elementary level were not receiving required instruction in world languages as set forth in administrative code. Recommendations for addressing this problem may be found in the last section of this document.

Program Quality

N.J.A.C. 8-3.1(a)2 states that district boards of education shall ensure that curriculum and instruction are designed and delivered in such a way that all students are able to demonstrate the knowledge and skills specified by the Core Curriculum Content Standards. This means that districts must ensure that all students learn a world language in a program designed to meet state standards. Because providing a thorough and efficient education remains a priority in New Jersey schools, all students should be given the opportunity to learn a world language in a program that offers appropriate time allocations and quality instruction. A program that does not offer a sufficient amount of contact time and class sessions per week assumes less student proficiency from the outset and denies students access to quality instruction aligned to the standards. Success for all students in world languages depends not only on specifying the appropriate content, but also on establishing learning environments that facilitate student learning of a world language (i.e., classes meet consistently for multiple times per week throughout the school year).

The world languages standards document provides recommended time allocations to enable students to achieve the standards based on second language acquisition research. This information may be found on page 5 of the 2004 revised standards.

Instructional Time in K-8 World Languages Programs

Table 6: World Languages Minutes of Instruction per Week (2003–04)

The data above indicate that the average amount of instructional time in grades K-5 is a little over 50 minutes per week. The average minutes of instruction increase incrementally to approximately 160 minutes in grade eight. While the department does not prescribe the number of minutes of instruction per week to achieve the standards, it recognizes that students will not have sufficient opportunities to learn without adequate time allocations in a regularly scheduled sequence of instruction. It is important to note that the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages recommends that students be enrolled in elementary programs that meet from three-five days per week for no less than 30 minutes per class, and in middle school programs that meet daily for no less than 40 minutes per class (ACTFL, 1998).

Table 7: World Languages Number of Sessions per Week (2003–04)

While numerous factors contribute to the acquisition of a second language, two key factors are time and intensity of instruction. The data above show that in grades K-5, world languages instruction takes place between one and two times per week and in grades 6-8, between three and four times per week. While there is an increase in the frequency of instruction in grades 6-8, the number of contact sessions still falls below the recommended frequency of instruction of three to five sessions in grades K-5 and five sessions in grades 6-8 (ACTFL, 1998).

Based upon the data provided, it can be ascertained that most students are acquiring minimal levels of language proficiency. As a result, K-5 world languages students learn some basic words and phrases and develop some linguistic and cultural awareness in the language studied. Many students are likely not meeting stated goals and objectives in the world languages standards. Learning environments that facilitate student acquisition of a second language include scheduling classes that meet consistently for multiple times per week throughout the school year.

The best way to understand the differences among various program models is to visit successful programs in action. All programs share four qualities: flexibility in the face of fluctuating financial support; close teamwork among language professionals, administrators, classroom teachers and parents; strong leadership that has been key to program success; and finally, a strong commitment to the program and to the goals of elementary or middle school language education. Contact information for 2004-06 World Languages Model Program Resource Centers may be found at: <http://www.state.nj.us/njded/aps/cccs/wl/resource.htm#1>.

Table 8: Integration of Other Subjects into World Languages Instruction (2003–04)

Approximately 40 percent of K-8 programs consistently use content from other core areas as the content of the world languages class with the language serving as the tool of instruction. The shift from solely linguistic content to content that reflects the broader K-8 curriculum may be attributed largely to the intensive professional development programs offered to world languages practitioners since the adoption of the standards. These programs are the result of the collaborative efforts between the department and other organizations, such as the Foreign Language Educators of New Jersey, the New Jersey Principals and Supervisors Association, the American Council on the Teaching of Foreign Languages, and many New Jersey institutions of higher education.

The movement towards content-related instruction reflects an important shift in the teaching and learning of world languages in New Jersey. Research has shown that students develop advanced levels of language competency most successfully when they are engaged in meaningful and challenging communication about non-language subjects. The use of content in the world languages classroom is also strongly supported by both second language acquisition theory and brain research. The content of important topics and ideas helps students understand the world in which they live and who they are. Content also helps students respond to important questions that extend learning beyond the classroom. The focus of the world languages curriculum has been expanded from the idea that the content of language instruction is language only to the idea that a world language is an effective tool to communicate content. World languages can no longer be viewed as an isolated area of the curriculum where learning is separate from what is taking place in other content areas. Learning through languages other than English has now become part of all student learning, heightening the importance and visibility of world languages to the entire school community.

District Implementation of K-8 Programs

Issues of Non-Compliance

The world languages data collection provides information on the extent to which programs were implemented in the 2003-04 school year. A fully implemented program means that world languages instruction takes place at every grade level in grades K-8. In order to understand what a partially implemented program means, it is necessary to review the language found in New Jersey Administrative Code pertaining to world languages instruction.

N.J.A.C.6A:8-1.1 (a) requires districts to ensure that all K-8 students study a world language. This codifies the implementation of the world languages section of the core curriculum content standards originally adopted by the New Jersey State Board of Education in May 1996. On April 7, 2004, the State Board of Education adopted the 2004 revised world languages standards that continue to include the required study of world languages in K-8. Accordingly, districts are required to have a world languages program in place at every grade level in grades K-8. Therefore, for purposes of this survey, a partially implemented program has been defined as one that is not offered at every grade level in grades K-8.

Qualitative Data and Reporting Inconsistencies

It is important to note that as part of the department's analysis of survey data, qualitative data was also obtained from districts regarding program implementation that was included in a section for additional comments on the electronic survey. Phone calls were then made to districts in August and September 2004 to verify the data reported prior to the completion of this report. Further verification of data was conducted by the county offices of education in March 2005. These verification measures revealed inconsistencies in reporting by some districts. Please be aware that the District Summary Profile of World Languages Programs in K-8 found on page 29 of this report reflects information provided on the electronic survey for the 2003-04 year only and does not reflect programs that were added, or for that matter, cut back or eliminated in schools subsequent to that time period.

What Constitutes Having a Program

The data provided in the survey show a wide variation in what districts defined as “having a program.” Quantitative data on time and frequency of program as well as qualitative data reveal that a program is defined for some districts as teaching a few words in the target language, singing songs in the language, having occasional cultural celebrations, or having world languages instruction generally “infused” in the curriculum by a teacher(s) that may or may not speak the language in various content areas. While one can report such program descriptions as constituting a program on paper, these programs will not enable students to meet the outcomes defined in the standards. A pedagogically sound program in any content area has a well designed curriculum that is closely aligned with the standards at various benchmark levels, uses age-appropriate instructional methodologies and employs assessment strategies to measure student performance and growth at regular intervals. Moreover, in world languages programs, the expectation is that the program is delivered in the target language from the earliest grades. While the standards and framework are highly supportive of content integration, content-related programs reinforce and enhance content in a continuous, systematic way while also developing language skills in a spiraling and recursive manner. These programs require a well designed curriculum that includes assessment of both content knowledge and language skills.

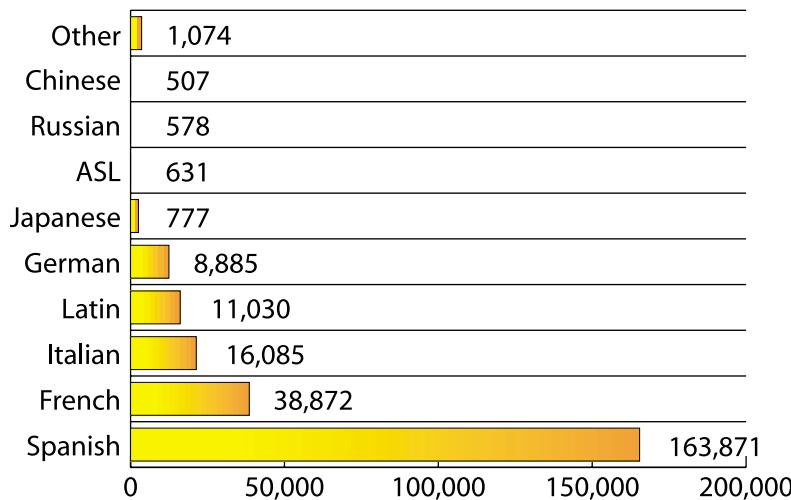

The variation of interpretation on what constitutes a program is an important factor for consideration when reviewing quantitative data on student enrollments in programs in K-8. Such wide interpretation suggests that some programs may not be providing an instructional environment for all students to achieve the world languages standards.

Part IV: High School World Languages Programs

Table 9: World Languages Offerings and Enrollment

9-12 World Languages Enrollment
Out of 382,132 Students
(2003-2004)

*Other languages include Greek, Portuguese and Arabic

A total of 244,902 students were enrolled in world languages instruction in grades 9-12 during the 2003-04 academic year. Since this is the first data collection conducted by the department on the state of world languages implementation, there is no comparative data. This graph depicts a similar language enrollment pattern as in grades K-8. Spanish remains the language most frequently studied by high school students followed by French, Italian, Latin and German. Non-European languages such as Chinese, Japanese or Arabic are offered in only a very small percentage of schools. There is a great need for individuals who speak world languages that have been identified as central to global literacy and that are important for future state and national economic and security and human needs. In 2001, the National Commission on Asia in the Schools released a report Asia in the Schools: Preparing Young Americans for Today's Interconnected World. The report concluded that American students had rudimentary knowledge about global issues and cultures. In addition, the report emphasized that language instruction did not reflect the realities of the interconnected world of the 21st century—a world that requires individuals who are proficient in current major world languages. The department is currently pursuing strategies that will support the implementation of programs in the less commonly taught languages.

The 2004 data reflects an increase in the total number of New Jersey students taking advanced placement tests in a world language by approximately 25 percent in comparison with the corresponding 1999 data.

Spanish-speaking students who arrive in classrooms with diverse levels of English-language proficiency should be given the same opportunity as others to learn world languages. In the best-case scenario, they should be provided with opportunities to maintain and develop native language skills and also to study another world language in addition to English at some point in their schooling. When referring to students who fall under this description, schools have used terms such as English as a Second Language (ESL) students, bilingual education (BE) students, limited English proficient (LEP) students, or English language learners (ELL). These students may be able to understand spoken language, but are unable to speak beyond words and phrases. Others can speak the language fluently, but cannot express themselves in writing. Some can understand and speak the language well, but have limited reading and writing skills. Finally, there are those students who can function at a high level in all language skill areas.

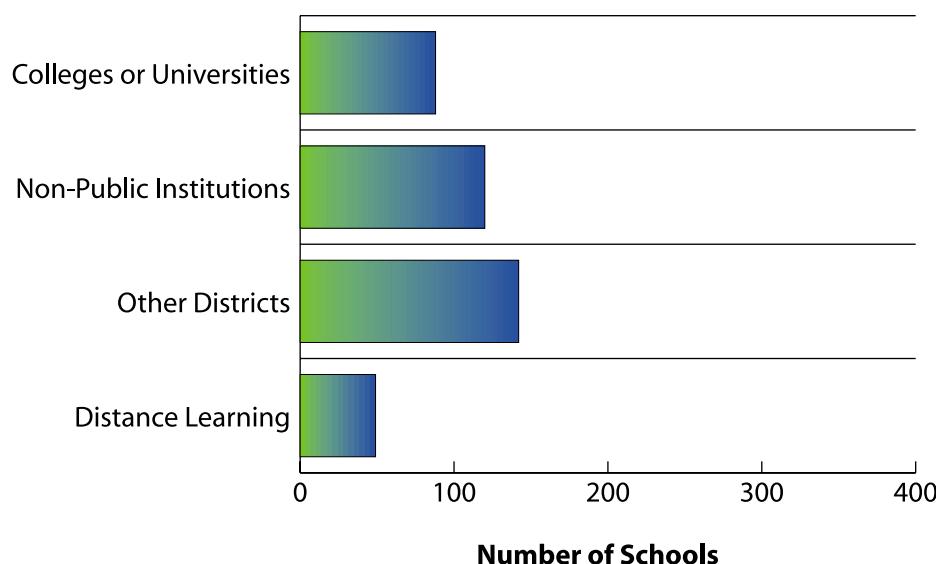

What implication does this diverse population of Spanish-speaking language students have for world languages instruction? It is important that Spanish for Native Speakers (SNS) courses are offered to address the varying linguistic needs of the students and to provide appropriate cultural and literary content. This goes beyond the goal of having students participating in Spanish advanced placement programs. The ultimate goal of instruction for these students should be to speak and write Spanish effectively in an occupational or professional setting.

Teachers often experience difficulty working with heritage language students in world languages classes with monolingual students. This issue is addressed by various heritage language experts in a volume entitled Spanish for Native Speakers, part of a professional development series produced by the American Association of Teachers of Spanish and Portuguese. The essence of this response seems appropriate for any language class with heritage and English-dominant students and is not only applicable to Spanish. “Ideally, mixed classes should not exist because they are pedagogically unsound. Heritage speakers of Spanish should be in SNS (Spanish for Native Speakers) courses that address their specific needs” (Samaniego & Pino, 2000, p.32).

Supplementary World Languages Instruction

Table 12: Schools Granting Credit for World Languages Instruction Received at Other Institutions or through Distance Learning

New Jersey schools most commonly grant credits received from other districts (142 schools in 57 districts) rather than from non-public institutions (120 schools in 46 districts) or colleges and universities (88 schools in 71 districts). Distance learning has been underutilized as a mechanism for students to earn credit for the study of languages not routinely offered in the school district. Distance learning was used in 49 schools in 398 districts during the 2003-04 school year.

Part V: International Education

The study of a world language(s) is an important component of international education which focuses on increased student knowledge and awareness of other regions of the world, their languages and cultures. Because of New Jersey's growing role in international business and trade, the need for our students to function in the society and workplace of a globally interconnected world is greater than ever. New Jersey's Core Curriculum Content Standards for World Languages lay the groundwork for excellent international education programs by emphasizing well articulated sequences of language study beginning in the early grades that will lead to growing language and cultural proficiency. International trips and exchanges provide an excellent means for students to experience other languages and cultures beyond New Jersey's borders. In the 2003-04 school year, 1807 students in 55 schools took 84 trips to 18 countries. 891 students also participated in exchange programs with other countries in the Americas, Europe, Asia and Australia and 33 schools reported partner/sister school programs with 14 countries.

The International Baccalaureate Program

This program aims to develop inquiring, knowledgeable and caring young people who help to create a better and more peaceful world through intercultural understanding and respect. The International Baccalaureate Organization (IBO) works with schools, governments and international organizations to develop challenging programs of international education and rigorous assessment. These programs encourage students across the world to become active, compassionate and lifelong learners who understand that other people, with their differences, can also be right. The IBO offers three programs to a wide variety of schools located throughout the world: the Diploma Program (DP), for students in the final two years of school before university; the Middle Years Program (MYP), for students aged 11 to 16; and the Primary Years Program (PYP), for students aged 3 to 12. The IBO provides IB world schools with: detailed curriculum guidelines for each program and subject area; teacher training workshops; online access to 3,000 education resources; subject area experts; discussion sessions with teachers at IB schools throughout the world; external assessment of DP students' work; and, procedures for school-based (internal) assessment of student work (<http://www.ibo.org/ibo/index.cfm>).

The Model United Nations Program

The Model United Nations Program presents a unique and engaging opportunity for students to learn about other cultures, current events and international relations in a hands-on environment. From drafting resolutions in the General Assembly to resolving crises in the Security Council, students learn through doing. Students in this program study the major organizations of the United Nations from the Secretariat to the General Assembly to the Court of Justice. They learn about the daily activities of the UN from adopting resolutions to providing humanitarian relief to conducting peacekeeping operations. Students also study major figures in international relations from individual countries to regional coalitions to non-governmental organizations. In sum, this program teaches thorough understanding of the structure and workings of the UN. Students learn skills needed to be effective participants in the model United Nations simulations. Topics covered include: researching countries and issues; being a convincing and effective representative; drafting resolutions and proposals; making persuasive speeches and presentations; and the fundamentals of parliamentary procedure (www.un.org/cyberschoolbus/modelun/index.html).

Partner/Sister Schools

Sister schools promote cross-cultural understanding by connecting districts in the state with schools around the globe. Classrooms separated by border, culture, and geography are united through similar interests and common principles. Students participate in collaborative projects ranging from literature and social development to science and technology. By connecting classrooms worldwide, the academic setting is used to conquer ignorance, bridge cultural gaps, and create international friendships (<http://www.iearn.org>).

Multicultural Curriculum

A multicultural curriculum celebrates racial and cultural diversity by allowing students to learn about other cultures. It seeks to promote the valuing of diversity and equal opportunity for all people through understanding of the contributions and perspectives of people of differing race, ethnicity, culture, language, religion, gender, sexual orientation, and physical abilities and disabilities. The following web site serves as a starting point for teachers that wish to create a more inclusive, multicultural curriculum for their students (<http://www.mhhe.com/socscience/education/multi/curriculum.html>).

International Education in New Jersey: Vision, Mission and Goals

Vision: New Jersey citizens have the requisite knowledge to live and work effectively in a complex and dynamic world.

Mission: The creation of a systemic approach to ensure that all New Jersey students are provided with the knowledge and skills to be able to function culturally, politically and economically in a global society.

Goals:

1. To help students understand, connect to and act on critical global issues by integrating international perspectives into curricula in all core curriculum content standards areas with special emphasis on: world languages instruction that includes languages central to global literacy and that are important for future economic and security needs; and social studies instruction that focuses on global issues and how to address them within the diverse social, political and economic contexts that exist worldwide.
2. To connect student acquisition of international literacies to real world experiences both in New Jersey and beyond state and national borders.
3. To enhance teacher capacity for international teaching excellence through pre-service education, professional development and opportunities for exchange and study abroad.

Summary of the State of World Languages Implementation in New Jersey

- The adoption of world languages standards in 1996 has led to the growth of elementary and middle school world languages programs.
- All students in grades K-8 are not receiving world languages instruction as all districts have not yet fully implemented K-8 world languages programs.
- The quality of K-8 programs varies considerably regarding time and frequency of instruction.
- There is considerable variation in what districts define as “having a program.” Both quantitative and qualitative data reveal descriptions of programs that do not provide learning environments that facilitate student learning of a world language.
- Inadequate time allocations and poor program design in some K-8 programs will not enable students to meet the outcomes defined in the standards.
- Spanish is the language of choice in K-12 programs. Few districts offer critical need languages such as Chinese or other Asian languages.
- Due to lack of comparative data, this report is not able to provide information on increases or decreases in enrollments at the high school level.
- There is noticeable integration of other content areas into the teaching of world languages that reinforces content and concepts from other core areas.
- Some districts reported meaningful initiatives, such as student exchanges and sister schools, that are supportive of the study of world languages and the goals of international education.

Recommendations

1. Initiate effective strategies to foster the growth of quality K-8 world languages programs that include:
  - Underscoring for districts the importance of using the resources made available by the department to develop pedagogically sound programs. Such programs have a well designed curriculum closely aligned with both the proficiency levels and benchmark grade levels in the world languages standards, use age-appropriate instructional methodologies and employ a variety of assessment strategies to measure student performance and growth at regular intervals.
  - Addressing the variation in K-8 program quality by making available to districts proficiency-based assessment options that will assist them in determining if their current program design enables students to meet the standards;
  - Providing the option for all K-12 world languages teachers to participate in a no-cost online teacher training program to assist in developing world languages programs designed to enhance students' language proficiency; and
  - Offering technical assistance to districts on how to use the data on student learning as a strategy for directly improving teaching and learning in world languages and for building district capacity to design and implement effective standards-based programs.
2. Create a compliance action plan to address districts that are not in compliance with the K-8 world languages mandate.

Appendix: District Summary Profile of World Languages Programs in K-8 2003-04

The Appendix that follows includes a summary of data reported for K-8 world languages programs for each school in every New Jersey school district. Ungraded classes are excluded in the profile, but there are some special service schools with specific grade levels that are included. Where information was missing or inconsistently reported, MISSING is indicated in the program field. For example, there are a few schools that reported no world languages information, but report world languages teachers in the department's certified staff data. These have MISSING indicated in the sessions per week, weeks per year column, etc. Additionally, if districts reported world languages enrollment, but no program information, the word MISSING will be indicated in all program fields.
